"Mr. Blinken talked about consolidating the North American region, and we agreed on that," President Andrés Manuel López Obrador (Mexico) said during a press conference last month. "Not only did I tell him that we were in agreement with consolidating ourselves as a region, including the three countries—Canada, the United States, Mexico—but we were also in favor of the unity of the entire American continent to repeat our project that, just as the European community first emerged and became the European Union. That is what we want, which is [Simón] Bolivar's dream, but integrating Canada, the United States, all of the Americas."
